INTRODUCTION

On November 12, seven new inductees will take the stage at Boston's State Room to be formally recognized for their vast achievements in New England residential design.

This year, architects Jacob Albert, John Tittmann, Marcus Gleysteen, and Douglas VanderHorn, interior designer Charlotte Barnes, landscape architect Peter White, and specialty designer Lew French will join the sixty-three honorees who have come before them in the nine years since the New England Design Hall of Fame was first conceived.

As in past years, the winners of our ninth annual awards possess a rich portfolio of residential work and an ongoing commitment to the design community at large. Their backgrounds may range from the home-building trade to fashion to modern sculpture, but they all share a love of art and travel that influences their work, a dedication to creating beautiful spaces that fit the individual needs of each client, and a deep respect for the history of design.

The individuals tasked with the difficult mission of selecting the 2015 inductees include New England Design Hall of Fame winners from the past three years: interior designer Jim Gauthier, architect Patrick Ahearn, and landscape architect Morgan Wheelock. They were joined by Ted Landsmark, president emeritus of Boston Architectural College and board member of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, and the judging process was coordinated by New England Home's editor-in-chief, Kyle Hoepner. Together, the committee carefully reviewed the dozens of nominations from across the industry, with each judge asked to consider several criteria when making the selections: number of years spent in the design trade, community involvement, mentorship of the next generation, other industry recognition, and, most important, quality of work.

As difficult as the selection process is, the outcome has once again proven to be an exceptional representation of the long-standing residential design talent we have here in New England. We hope you'll join us on Thursday, November 12, at the State Room in Boston for an unforgettable gala evening of dinner, drinks, and a special awards ceremony celebrating this year's inductees. •
